CFA SOCIETY BOILERPLATES

Media releases issued by CFA societies must carry the appropriate boilerplate(s) to ensure that the purpose of CFA Institute and member societies is consistently conveyed in all markets.

Societies are encouraged to work with a trusted translation partner to ensure the availability of accurate translations in good time, and to ensure that their society president reviews and approves the final version of the translation for accuracy and appropriate local language nuances before the text is used.

The two new boilerplates are outlined below, with accompanying guidelines for their use:

Boilerplate one

We propose that societies use Boilerplate One as their default boilerplate. Boilerplate One describes the local society within the context of the broader member network and its relationship to CFA Institute. Boilerplate One should work for most communications that originate in the local market, as well as those originating from CFA Institute research and advocacy functions.

EXCEPTION: CFA Program and credentialing-related announcements require Boilerplate Two. Please see below.

Boilerplate two

We require that societies use Boilerplate Two [together with the CFA Institute boilerplate] for all CFA Program and credentialing-related announcements. This includes all exam-related news including the announcements detailing results from the June and December examination sittings. Boilerplate Two is shorter, because it will always be accompanied by the official CFA Institute boilerplate.
